Trends in the online information space and their impact on elections '20-'21

- 1 The focus shifted from fear of foreign interference to one where domestic disinformation rose as an equally concerning phenomenon, amplified by (artificial) social media algorithms and mainstream media. Key public figures, including state leaders and political actors act as “super-spreaders”
- 2 An information environment increasingly difficult to navigate due to the overwhelming amount and high variety of data and information, often conflicting. This unprecedented volume of potentially false, misleading data and information flooded the users generating a reality vertigo.
- 3 Manipulation campaigns across online (and traditional) media intensified.
- 4 Abusive limitations of the freedom of expression across the globe. The most worrisome violations are restrictions related to the freedom of expression (under the pretext of tackling disinformation), and media integrity.
- 5 Deficit of trust in authorities, alimented by online disinformation practices.
- 6 Incapacity by the online social media platforms to take measures that fit the dimension of the problem and by media.
- 7 Online, gendered disinformation, discrimination and various other forms of digital aggression have surged.
- 8 Internet shut downs/disruptions around elections.
